For Deborah Tarr, painting is a process of self discipline and restraint. Developed over several months, each of her artworks is carefully considered and wonderfully complete. This series of recent paintings and assemblages takes inspiration from her travels. Evoquing the British coastlands and countryside, the urban sprawl of Los Angeles or the landscapes of California, each artwork finds a subtle balance between figuration and abstraction. The photographs added throughout the catalogue offer a glimpse into the origins of the works, but for Tarr they act as a point of departure. While some works are more clearly 'of' somewhere, each work is a representation of a moment in time, a feeling, or a memory - a metaphor for Deborah Tarr's own experiences of space and place. Her work is imbued with emotion, transforming each painting into something deeply personal. We are invited to participate in this reflective moment, the canvas acting as an interface between the artist and viewer. Her paintings are characterised by the serenity found in the vulnerability of this contact and the simplicity of its presentation. Tarr describes her work as a 'humanist endeavour', an attempt to connect on a profound level. It is this emotional resonance even in the most abstract of her works, that makes Deborah Tarr's paintings unique, powerful and universal.
